

location | Chicago, Illinois

program | artist studio, apartment, and gallery

The concept leading the design of this urban gallery was creating community spaces which facilitate the natural social characteristic of art. Formally, the building is shaped with a curvular form along the corner so as to allow for smooth pedestrian traffic between Chicago Avenue and Franklin Street. Furthermore, the building incorporates numerous free floor plans to allow for the gallery to accomodate different art pieces over time if needed. Finally, rooftop terraces and plazas allow for people to gather informally for different events therefore activating the building on all different levels and during different times throughout the day.

